Who's getting on
their customers'
nerves?

Last year,
we studied patience.

If your tech keeps
customers waiting,
patience is probably running low.

The image features a black background with several red heart-shaped lollipops. Many of these lollipops are broken, cracked, or crushed, with some showing internal patterns. The white sticks of the lollipops are visible, extending across the frame. The central text is in a bold, white, sans-serif font.

A hallway with three doors: blue, red, and green. Each door has a spotlight above it. The red door is in the center, flanked by the blue and green doors. The text "We've learned to think in channels." is overlaid at the bottom.

We've learned to think in channels.

The result
for employees
and customers
is siloes.

Customers are:

- kept waiting
- repeating themselves
- forced to take matters into their own hands

And they ask:

Why do your emails get me, but your agent doesn't?

When the experience
is disjointed,
customers think

THAT'S A WRAP

The image shows a top-down view of a person with long brown hair and a beard, wearing a brown jacket, sitting at a white desk. They are holding a white mug. The desk is equipped with three large monitors on adjustable arms, a laptop, a black mouse, a headset, a desk lamp, a pen holder, and three small potted plants. The background is a dark wooden floor with a herringbone pattern. The text 'THAT'S A WRAP' is overlaid in the center of the image.

Thank you.
